OLIVE HARPER GIVES INFORMATION ON THE BONNET QUESTION,

And Then She Describes in Detail a Numher of Pretty Bonnets and Some Very Taking Wraps and Costumes-Pictures of the Latter.

[Special Correspondence.] NEW YORK, April 24.—Truly the new spring bonnets are lovely. They are small, it is true, and lack something of that pointed, aggressive style that were favorites for the last two seasons, but the velvet flowers and the fine taste shown in the selection of colors make them beautiful. There was one black lace bonnet, with velvet nasturtias in three or four shades of yellow, from lemon to rich orange brown, and words leaving your side towels around. Another cannot point its superb beauty. The man comes along with something to wipe, brilliance of the coloring was toned down by the black lace, which was twined among them so that they were partly veiled and shaded.

ELEGANT NEW WRAPS. The crownless bonnets are a fixture, particularly for the carriage and visiting. The most of these have a decided coronet effect, many having a band of jet or iridescent bend trimming in Eiffel points set so that the points seem to stand up from the head. It is very becoming to any style of face.

If fashion shows sentiment in bonnets and hats she shows little in the naming of colors this season, and all the richest, prettiest shades are named after vegetables. Aubergine, or egg plant, is the favorite. This is a rich purple with black slades. These are carrot, tomato, mushroom and lettuce tints in all the new fabrics, but Eiffel red, or terra cotta, still retains its popularity.

Plaids in soft surah silk and in poplins as well as woolen goods are very popular and, to be entirely de rigueur, should be made on the bias. Black velvet in bias folds or ribbon is the only suitable trimming, and black wraps or jackets the only outer garments that should be worn. I give here three new and very handsome wraps; two are made of black ggo faille Française, twimmed with lace and chemille trimmings. They are easily made, as the back of them both are just

Just now the maiden with the abnornally developed hat brim and the big dog are seen out, and the young lait's struggles to keep the dog within bounds and the hat from blowing off afford name for anxiety on the part of the be-solder not unmixed with amusement. If he hat did blow off, could she trust the dog to eatch it for her? Or is the hat nucled on securely? The whole is a subject for reflection, but I don't believe the unils would injure the brain of any girl who goes out in the street with a big dog. OLIVE HARPER.

Nearly every man you meet carves a leg of mutton badly, and yet its tenderness almost always depends on the way the slices are cut off. There are two ways of doing this. When you are sure that the leg is from a sheep of a good breed and that it is really tender, take hold of it by the knuckle with the left hand and then cut the slices perpendicularly from the joint to the bone of the fillet; then remove the muscle of the knuckle, next turn the leg over and slice off the back portion. For this essentially cimitive way of carving gourmets substi inte carving by curvilinear slices, which renders the pieces more sneculent.

But neither of the ways of carving a leg f mutton should be resorted to except when the meat is of the best quality and of great tenderness. In other cases the best way to proceed is to cut horizontally in-stend of perpendicularly—that is, cut off the slices parallel with the bone; the slices should be cut very thin, and when a sufficient number have been sliced off you should plunge the fork into what remains
